

Editorial: Suspension notice

Okajimas Folia Anatomica Japonica was first published in 1922 through the private funding of Professor Keiji Okajima, the first head of the Department of Anatomy, Keio University School of Medicine. Back then it was the only western-language anatomical journal available in our country, through which the researchers could present their achievements worldwide. To this date, for about 100 years, it has been published periodically by the editorial committee in the department.

This time, the committee decided to put a break constructively; we suspend publication of this journal while anticipating the future resumption as a form adapted to the times. Accordingly, we have closed new submissions on September 30, 2019. Thank you for understanding and continuous support for Okajimas Folia Anatomica Japonica.
